For December 4. "Hezekiah Reopens

C. His successors were Amaziah, Uzziah, Jotham and Ahaz. The last named, patterning after the Kings of Israel, gave terning after the Kings of Israel, gave himself up to the most abominable idolatiries. He reared altars in Jerusalem and offered sacrifices upon them, and made his own children to pass through the fire. He changed the house of the Lord so as to make it conform to the temples which he had seen in Syria. Thus he offered contempt to the true God and provoked him to anger. For the implety which he practiced he was in dishonor with his people, and when he was dead they refused him burial with the Kings. After sixteen years of such rule Ahuz was succeeded by Hezekiah, his son, who set himself at once to the work of reform. Among the first things that he did was the reopening of the temple about which we study today.

SANOTIFIED—(Verses 13 and 19.) The temple had been so shamefully polluted under Ahaz that it was unfit for the worship of Jehovah. By the King's order the Levites were set to the task of cleansing. The inferior priests were employed in that business for the space or fifteen days himself up to the most abominable idolawere killed, and the blood was sprinkled on the altar. This was an act of atonement or reconciliation, by which confession of sin was made and pardon secured. It is not here stated that the prescribed rules for the priest, the ruler or the mation, were observed, requiring the blood to be carried into the most holy place. Perhaps this was not done, and in that case there offerings must be considered as different in some respects from those prescribed in that part of the law. It will be noticed that the offerings were presented, not only in behalf of Judah, but for all Israel, and this was done at the command of Herekiah, who hoped to recover the ten tribes.

REJOICED—(Verses E.Z.) This occasion was undoubtedly solemn. In no other spirit could these sacrifices be rightly offered. All trifling and merry-making must have been excluded as wholly inappropriate. But there was a form of foy that rightly belonged here, indeed the best form, and that was encouraged by the King. He expected and desired that the people should rejoice. They had every reason to do so. The return to their temple and the true worship of God, the performance of sacred rites after the law of the Lord, the renewing of the covenant that had been broken, the forgiveness of sins that had been committed—all this was calculated to awaken gladness in the heart. And the King provided for its expression. He set Levites in their appointed places with musical instruments of various kinds and they rendered the Psalms of David, after the custom of other days. Cymbals, psalteries, harps and trumpets biended their joyful strains to gladden all hearts.

WORSHIPED—(Verses 28 and 29.) All this was outward and formal, something and trumpets blended their joyful strains to gladden all hearts.

WORSHIPED—(verses 28 and 29.) All this was outward and formal, something to be seen and heard. The appeal to the senses was very frequent in the Jewish system, and at that time, because of the condition of the people, it was very helpful and necessary. But there was also something for the heart. The King and all that were with him worshiped. The feelings of holy devotion and reverence found expression, moreover, after the custom of the time. All bowed themselves to thearth, prostrating their bodies before the Lord. (Psalm xcv. 6.) The act was afterwards changed to a resting upon the knee (Rom. xi. 4), or a mere inclination of the head (Ex. xii. 27) as in our time. It was a most impressive scene when the vast congregation thus rendered their devotion to God while the sacrifices were offered and the singers sang and the trumpets sounded, the devotion being continuous until the prescribed course of the ritual was complete.

INSTRUCTED—(Verses 30 and 31.) A ed, the devotion being continuous and prescribed course of the ritual was complete.

INSTRUCTED—(Verses 30 and 31.) A public and official act of religion has its value. It brings the items of authority, regularity and uniformity, especially to those who lack the power of initiative. There are many who would never begin any religious exercises if left wholly to themselves. And yet, there is great need of the purely personal element, when one exercises according to his own pleasure and with a sense of absolute freedom. And so when the sacrifices ordered by the King and conducted according to the prescribed formula were completed the people were instructed to continue their sacrifices, each in his own way, with larger or smaller displays, according to ability and taste. And that they did with free hearts, enjoying their religious privilege unrestrained. To help them in these sacrifices the music continued as before. The words of the sweet singer rang out through the temple and lifted up the heart while men brought in their sacrifices and their thank offerings.

but it was a queer mixture, for every other sentence was a devout invocation of Allah, and with every other sentence he continued to advertise his goods and summon the passerby.

We smile, perhaps we frown; but it is a question whether many of us have a right to point the finger at that Arab. When we go to church is our worship the worship in spirit and in truth which alone the Savior desires? Or do we not all too often, though more quietly, mix business and devotion, worldliness and heaven, precisely after the Arab's fashion?

True worship in the first place, is longed for. It is a matter of appetite. Says Thoreau: "How prompt we are to satisfy the hunger and thirst of our bodies; how slow to satisfy the hunger and thirst of our soulis!" But too often our souls are not hungry and thirsty; if they were, we should leap to the spread table.

Now we cannot get an appetite except by exercise; so that true worship, in the second place, is prepared for. The worker is the worshiper. If your church services are dead to you, it is because no service on your part has preceded them. Try to conquer evil, in yourself and others; try to alleviate the woes of the wretched; minister to the sick and the prisoner; feet the hungry and ad the poor; teach the ignorant; toll for the kingdom of carth; do all this or only a part of it all, and your feeble, perplexed soul will nasten to the sanctuary with an eager cry for the guidance and strength it so sadly needs. Truly live for the things of the spirit, and you will know what it is to worship in spirit and in truth. The temper of the age is far from worship, as 'lan Maclaren' expresses it, 'One is haunted with the conviction that we haunted with the conviction that we have come to a time when public resignous zeal in the hearts of the people.

Mr. MacLeoad asked for more time in which to endeavor to adjust the differences between the Chicago-St. Louis lines, but it is believed that the Frisco will put the rate in unless the schedule is increased to eight bours.

cars, loaded with products of the mills in the lower Monongahela Valley, block the the lower Monongahela Valley, block the yards of the Pittsburg, Virginia and Charleston road at the Homestead plant, and hundreds of other cars are on tracks at other mills awaiting shipment. The shipping yards at several places are also offed with the finished product that should have been loaded on the cars more than a week ago. The congestion has reached that point where officials of the mills face a probable suspension until relief appears. While some freight is being moved the railroads are seriously handicapped in the way of motive power. There is also a serious shortuge of cars.
